conducting the interviews and hearing the stories of survival, hope, and overcoming racial and ethnic persecution, topics that still resonate loudly in today's world."

Jewish Community Services is publishing a catalog with the full interviews and essays by students and other participants, to accompany the exhibit as well. Leveraging the design and media arts areas of the college, students and facilitators captured the stories in photos and recordings which will be donated to the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum for their permanent archives.

"This exhibit also demonstrates how the college can partner with local non-profits to create opportunities for learning that can bring the lessons of history to life," Fulmer added.

Fulmer acknowledged that parents and educators may be concerned about the content of the exhibit.

"While stories conveyed by survivors sometimes contain graphic violence, the exhibit was designed to convey them without the addition of graphic photographs from that period," she explained. "The project team felt strongly that the stories from the survivors were about hope, and that further investigation can be done by the viewer to corroborate the details through research in the library and via sources such as the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum."

The Recounting Memory: Flint- Area Holocaust Survivors & Youth Dialogue with History exhibit is funded in part by the Community Foundation of Greater Flint with additional support from Mott Community College. The exhibit will remain installed at the MCC Library through Aug. 25 with plans to travel to other locations as they become available.
